He considers such issues as system design, transmission and distribution, and the development of smart grids, with special emphasis placed on the problems of integrating wind power into wholesale market design. There's no Windows. Since it was observed that the variance of a damaged transmission signal is greater than that of a healthy transmission signal, the decision to lock the denominator is made based on an upper limit,  $L$ ; given by  $L = \frac{Z \cdot s \cdot \sqrt{v}}{\sqrt{N}}$  where  $v$  is the mean value of previous variances,  $Z$  is the probability coefficient usually chosen for a normal distribution,  $s$  is the standard deviation of the previous variances, and  $N$  is the number of samples.
